ABOUT US

U.S. Embassy Singapore consists of 24 U.S. Federal Government agencies working in Singapore and the region. In advancing U.S. national interests, the Embassy also works closely with industry partners, including AmCham Singapore and the U.S.-ASEAN Business Council, to facilitate U.S. public and private sector solutions that benefit both Singapore and the United States. Examples of the efforts undertaken within the Embassy include the following:

- The U.S. Commercial Service (CS), part of the Department of Commerce's International Trade Administration, provides export assistance and market research to U.S. firms; CS also fosters level playing fields for American businesses globally and ensures rigorous enforcement of existing U.S. trade laws and agreements.
- The Department of Agriculture's Foreign Agricultural Service works to improve market access conditions for U.S. agricultural exports in Singapore, ensuring adoption of agricultural and trade policies based on international standards, as well as providing export assistance and market intelligence to U.S. exporters.
- The Department of State's Economic Unit engages Singapore on a range of bilateral and regional economic policy and regulatory issues in line with U.S. economic interests, and coordinates with the U.S. private sector and other U.S. government agencies to ensure a cohesive approach to economic engagement in Singapore.
- The Treasury Department engages government and private sector actors throughout the ASEAN region to foster economic growth and stability for the United States and its partners, and strengthen U.S. national security by combating threats and protecting financial system integrity.
- The U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC) partners with the private sector in Singapore to support solutions to the most critical challenges facing regional emerging markets, investing across sectors including energy, infrastructure, healthcare and technology as well as providing financing for small businesses and women entrepreneurs, all while adhering to high standards of sustainability and worker and human rights.

Singapore is a key economic partner for the United States. U.S.-Singapore economic ties run deep, with a foundation in our bilateral free trade agreement (FTA) - the first U.S. FTA in Asia - now in its 17th year. Despite its small landmass and population of only 5.7 million people, two-way trade of goods and services between the United States and Singapore topped $93 billion in 2020. In the past four years, the number of American companies registered in Singapore has grown almost 20 percent from 3,800 to 5,400. Many of these companies have chosen Singapore as their Asia headquarters to serve as a gateway to the region. A leading business and trading hub, Singapore's main advantages include its geographical location, robust intellectual property laws, strong legal protections, and rule of law. Furthermore, Singapore's position as a global financial hub makes it a critical partner in our efforts to combat corruption and terrorist financing around the world.

The Government of Singapore is forward leaning in building an ecosystem that fosters innovation and entrepreneurship through incentivizing startups and nurturing small and medium enterprises, including through its universities and government-affiliated institutions. Its efforts to boost the technology sector align with the strengths of American businesses, positioning the United States as a key partner in making Singapore and the region more economically competitive in the future.
